Greg's and Glenn's acceptance speech is a classic retelling of the history of their introduction of lean principles to construction we thought we should make it available to all so it is freely accessible by the general public. We apologize in advance for the weak audio of the Thursday morning productions—we've worked to tweak them but the system wasn't fully functional that morning and they are what they are. The remaining Thursday videos should be on line by the end of the week.

All in all, the videos represent a tremendous resource to our community and I think a tremendous increase in quality and fidelity from what we've done in the past. Let me know your thoughts as well.

The Winter Lean Design Forum date has been set for February 16 and 17 in Berkeley—mark your calendar and hold that date. This represents the first of our two design fora this year and the first time we have co-sponsored the event with the American Institute of Architects. Thanks to Iris Tommelein and Glenn Ballard at P2SL for working with us to make this collaboration effective and thanks to the AIA, and principally LCI Board Member Markku Allison for making this happen.

Our early summer Design Forum is scheduled to take place in St. Louis this year and will be jointly sponsored by LCI, AIA, the Construction Users Roundtable (CURT) and the Association of General Contractors (AGC). I lobbied hard for Chicago as Skender Construction had successfully hosted our Chicago COP kickoff there but the chance to extend our association with CURT made the latter's offer of having us join their June meeting very enticing. This will now be our third co-presentation with CURT in three years and will introduce lean design concepts to their members. This also represents an extension of our continued collaboration with AGC and an indication that both organizations take our extended relationship seriously.

We'll be encouraging our institutional, sustaining member design sponsors to participate in and send folks to these design fora so they represent a full spectrum of our community's most current thinking in design. Mark your calendars!

Thanks again for all you do. Be safe in this holiday season.
